

Lichfield Arboretum—Janet Burton

Here are a couple of photos taken on an Any Time Out Trip to the Arboretum in Lichfield approx 4 yrs ago.

The Eagle is the Royal Air Force Monument and is composed of thousands of feathers coated in silver and is magnificent. My Father, who really was called John Smith by the way, was a Spitfire Pilot in WW2 and was killed a week before D Day. Hence really wishing to see this particular Monument.

A national memorial was been unveiled to pay tribute to organ donors who have saved and transformed lives.

The Gift of Life memorial has opened at the National Memorial Arboretum in Staffordshire by the Duke of Gloucester.

It features a butterfly to symbolise new life, with the forget-me-not showing donors will not be forgotten.

The Butterfly is made up of thousands of pieces of mosaic. It is really beautiful. Since our visit I know that the area of the Arboretum has been almost doubled so we will hope to go and visit again ASAP.
